SUMMARY

In the third volume of the Korridor, Slovak-Hungarian Historical Journal two studies are presented. László Vörös analyzes the changes of social representations of the Slovak speaking population of the north-western part of the Hungarian Kingdom in the 19th century, and the Hungarian/Magyar nationalist discourses. The focus is on the period after the Austro-Hungarian Compromise in 1867, with particular attention on the years of the World War I. The study is based on the analysis of five Hungarian/Magyar regional newspapers (issued in mainly Slovak inhabited areas), in which the author explores the usage of social categories (“people/folk”, “nationality”, “nation”) and stereotypes as they were utilized in the social representations of the Slovaks. The goal of Tibor Pichler is to show – on the Slovak example – the problems of historically conditioned transition of Hungary from the stage of corporative society to the society of citizens.

In our Critique column we present a monography analyzing the action of a Hungarian party acting in Slovakia during World War II., an anthology of studies dealing with the Trianon peace treaty from a new perspective diverging from political interpretations, a corpus published on the 150th anniversary of the foundation of the Slovak Lutheran congregation in Budapest, a volume focusing on the nationality problems of Czechoslovakia between the two World Wars, and a book analyzing the forms of Slovak identity in the 19th century. In our Portrait column we would like to present a Slovak philosopher analyzing the Slovak political thinking in the 19th century, Tibor Pichler.
